You open 1♠, partner bids 4♥, known as a “splinter” bid, showing a singleton heart, four or more spades, plus opening-bid values. You have too good a hand to fool around. Partner must have minor-suit honor cards. You bid 4NT, RKCB with 1430 responses. Partner makes a second-step response of 5♦, showing 0 or 3 keycards. Given partner’s strong bid, partner must have three keycards: both missing aces plus the ♠K. East doubles the 5♦ response. Undaunted, you continue with 5NT, asking for specific kings up the line. If partner has either minor-suit king, you can count 13 top tricks and will bid 7NT. Alas, partner denies a king by returning to the six level of the agreed suit, spades. I know you would bid 6NT after partner bids 6♠ with the South hand. It is clearly the right bid, but I want to see how you play 6♠ with the ♦5 lead.

Solution

In a contract of 6NT, you would play low from dummy and claim after East took the king. It would also be quite reasonable to play low from dummy in a contract of 6♠ had there been no double. However, with the double and the ♦K placed to your right, you have a safer play. After all, the lead could be a singleton! Go up with the ♦A, draw trumps, strip hearts, discarding two diamonds from dummy, and exit with a diamond to East’s king, stripping both your hand and dummy of diamonds. East, in with the ♦K, has no answer and you have made your slam the hard way. The full deal:
